The Revolution had the first big chance of the night in the 17th minute when Peyton Miller got behind his defender and found himself in alone on goal, but the young wingback sent his shot directly at Portland's Maxime Crépeau. The Timbers then struck first in the 20th minute as rookie Ian Smith put his laces through a shot that found the top corner.

New England found its breakthrough through Luca Langoni in the 35th minute, capitalizing with a direct counterattack to level the match. Tanner Beason started the surge forward with an interception at the top of his own penalty area and played it wide to Carles Gil, who launched his delivery to a streaking Langoni. The Argentinian dribbled into the box, chopped the ball onto his left foot, and calmly rolled it into the far corner for his first goal of the season. Gil's seventh assist of the year gives him a helper in three straight games, and 14 combined goals and assists in the last 15 games.

Several more quality chances for the Revolution late in the first half and early in the second for the Revolution had the visitors inches away from an advantage. Leo Campana fired high on two occasions, and Langoni sent another shot inches wide of the net. Campana tested Crépeau with a powerful strike on target in the 57th minute, but the shot was parried away.

The Revolution found themselves trailing again in the 72nd minute after Timbers midfielder David Da Costa fired the hosts back ahead. His curling shot from distance found its way through traffic and just past the outstretched palm of goalkeeper Aljaž Ivačič. Less than five minutes later, Santiago Moreno unleashed a similar shot that was bending on target, but this time Ivačič was up to the test and punched it clear. Ivačič denied Moreno again in the 86th minute, one of his three saves on the night.

Head Coach Caleb Porter, coaching his first game in the visitors' technical area at Providence Park after five years at the helm of the Timbers from 2013-17, deployed attacking substitutes Maxi Urruti and Luis Diaz as his side pressed for an equalizer. One of New England's best chances of the later stages came in the 88th minute as Gil sent a left-footed cross onto the head of Alhassan Yusuf at the back post, but pressure from a Timbers defender forced the effort off target.

The Revolution return home to face Inter Miami CF on Wednesday, July 9 at Gillette Stadium. The 7:30 p.m. ET kickoff airs on MLS Season Pass on Apple TV in English and Spanish, 98.5 The Sports Hub, and 1260 AM Nossa Radio USA (Portuguese).
