This season, the Revolution have taken points in nine of their 13 road games, posting a 4-4-5 record away from Gillette Stadium. In their first away fixture in more than a month, New England is set to meet Columbus for the second time this season, having previously met on March 1 in the Revolution's home opener. In their most recent match, Columbus battled Toronto FC to a 1-1 draw on the road last weekend, with leading scorer Diego Rossi netting his 13th goal of the season. Rossi, a 2025 MLS All-Star alongside New England's Carles Gil, has scored in four of his last six appearances.

Gil, one of two Revolution players to appear in every game this season alongside Alhassan Yusuf, continues to power New England's attack with team highs in goals (9) and assists (9). He needs just one more of each to record his third MLS season with double-digit goals and assists. Gil leads MLS the league in progressive passes with 322, which is 89 more than the next-closest player, and also paces MLS with 99 passes into the penalty area, 26 more than any other player.

The Revolution have held opponents off the scoreboard in two of their last four away games. With a shutout on Saturday, New England would tie the club's best single-season mark with 10 clean sheets on the year. Goalkeeper Matt Turner has started the last two games in net since returning to the club in July, posting a four-save performance last weekend against LAFC. The U.S. international still owns the best all-time win percentage among Revolution goalkeepers (.587), while his 1.32 goals against average in MLS is just behind Matt Reis' club-best mark (1.31).

Forward Leo Campana is set to make his 100th MLS regular season appearance on Saturday, also his 20th game played with the Revolution. Over the last three games, the Ecuadorian striker has logged three goals. Campana has enjoyed success against the Crew in his four-year MLS career, tallying four goals with one assist in five previous meetings while he was with Inter Miami CF.

New England Head Coach Caleb Porter will make his second trip back to Columbus since leaving his former club in 2022. During his tenure with the Crew, Porter led Columbus to the 2020 MLS Cup title, his second league championship, and the 2021 Campeones Cup.
