With a fully rotated starting group for the Round of 32 contest, New England was effective in limiting Rhode Island FC in the first half. The two sides combined for only two shot attempts through 45 minutes, both by New England. One of the shots came from forward Marcos Zambrano, who made his club debut with a 90-minute shift.

After the break, the Revolution quickly snatched the momentum with Fagundez's opening goal in the 50th minute. The Revs' original Homegrown player combined with two of the club's more recent academy graduates in Miller, making his Open Cup debut, and McIntosh. The 18-year-old McIntosh headed Miller's lofted cross into the stride of Fagundez, who rocketed a shot into the back of the net. The goal was his third career tally in the U.S. Open Cup.

Parisian, making his 18th professional start and his first for the senior team, made a crucial stop in the 82nd minute to preserve New England's advantage. Rhode Island drove forward on a promising counter-attack, but Parisian came up big with a diving save. The 2025 MLS SuperDraft first-round pick made two saves in 120 minutes of action prior to the shootout.

In the closing minutes of the match, winger Griffin Yow and midfielder Allan Oyirwoth had opportunities to double New England's lead, but both saw their shot attempts narrowly miss the frame. In the 11th minute of second-half stoppage time, Rhode Island found their equalizer, a header from JJ Williams before the final whistle, to send the match to extra time.

In the 104th minute, the Revolution nearly regained their lead with their best chance of the added period. Forward Luca Langoni struck a shot past the goalkeeper's reach, but Rhode Island's center back cleared the quality chance off the line.

With the score still knotted at 1-1, the match proceeded to a penalty shootout. After Rhode Island converted its first attempt, Parisian delivered a clutch performance with three straight denials. Defender Tanner Beason, who wore the captain's armband for all 120 minutes tonight, stepped up to the spot to ice the game with the decisive penalty.

The Revolution will resume MLS play this weekend, closing a three-game homestand on Saturday night against the Columbus Crew at Gillette Stadium. The 7:30 p.m. ET match airs on Apple TV in both English and Spanish.
